

Dear

I'm writing to ask for leniency with our company policy on long hair. My intent is to grow my hair out for a charity event aimed at breaking the Guinness World Record for the largest hair donation in history.

There are millions of children and young adults who can't grow their own hair due to alopecia and other medical reasons, who face a loss of self-esteem, self-confidence, and social acceptance. This traumatic experience can impact a child's entire life.

There are people doing something about this. A company called The Longhairs and their charity partners at Children With Hair Loss are hosting The Great Cut, where they are calling for 2,500 volunteers to donate their hair.

I would like to grow my hair to donate at this event. Given permission to grow my hair out:

1. I'll keep my hair neat and tidy in the process, maintaining a presentable appearance at work.
2. I will represent our company with my participation in The Great Cut and report back on my experience.

I know we're an organization that cares about people, and I hope to be an example of that by participating in The Great Cut. There are even opportunities for our company to sponsor this event if we want to do more.

May I have our company's support? Thank you in advance.

Sincerely,
